In New York: The Week's Best Openings

By Andrew M. Goldstein

Published: January 21, 2010

Opening Saturday:

“And so on, and so on, and so on...” at Harris Lieberman, 89 Vandam Street, on view through Feb. 27, opening Saturday, Jan. 23, 6 – 8 p.m.

Can images be exhausted? Contemporary artists from Warhol to Luc Tuymans have been playing with this question for years by experimenting with what happens when a picture — a banal ad, a horrific photo — is repeated through art. The latest action-packed group show at Harris Lieberman gallery, titled “And so on, and so on, and so on...”, sets out to explore the topic skeptically by also looking back to the earlier studio traditions of artists who recapitulated the same image over and over again in pursuit of perfection, sometimes all their lives. Curated by artist Matt Sheridan Smith, the show features takes on the subject in a variety of media by established figures like Rirkrit Tiravanija to young artists like Darren Bader, Ajay Kurian, and Lisa Oppenheim.
